
Contents

Author Profile	iii
Acknowledgements	iii
Business Intelligence	iv
Preface	v
Chapter 1: What is Strategic HR?	1
Introduction: HR Strategy in the Front Line	3
Overhauling HR to embrace change	3
Working together to improve HR	3
Using line management experience effectively	4
Case Report: Orange	4
State-of-play: How We Got Here	5
A possible manpower crisis	6
Changes in strategy development and people management	6
Case Report: The Hong Kong Government	8
Making HR travel	9
Implementation challenges	10
State-of-play: Where Are We Now?	10
The balanced scorecard	10
The influence of the balanced scorecard	10
Human capital	11
The Survey: Background and Remit	11
The changing HR environment: focusing the HR function	12
The Evolving HR Environment: Improving HR Systems to Deal with Change	13
Case Report: Marks & Spencer	13
Background to the Business Intelligence Survey	15
The Survey: Overall Findings	15
1 Ensure efficient service delivery	15
2 Speak the language of business	15
3 Demonstrate the business benefits of HR	16
4 Create processes and practices for partnership	16
5 Develop business skills within HR	16
6 Build HR's credibility as a business partner	16
The Status of HR Today	16
HR's position and influence in the organization	17
The Case Studies	18
The New HR Director	18
Lessons	19
Case Study: The Children's Mutual	20
Chapter 2: Business Drivers and the Strategic HR Response	31
Executive Summary	31
Introduction: The Impact of Business Pressures on HR Strategy	32
Case Report: RNOH	32

The Trust's modernization strategy	33
Current State-of-play: The Need for Early HR Involvement	35
M & As: financial focus at the expense of people issues	35
Case Report: Abitibi-Consolidated	36
What the Survey Tells Us: The Importance of Sustainable and Adaptable HR Responses to Business Drivers	37
Business drivers: global expansion	38
The resource-based view of competitive advantage	40
The Choice of Model for Structuring HR	41
Case Study: Orange Group HR	43
Chapter 3: Alignment with Corporate Goals	49
Executive Summary	49
Introduction: The Impact of Competitive Resourcing on HR Planning	50
Background	51
Current State-of-the art: Integrating Qualitative Input with Quantitative Feedback	51
What the Survey Tells Us: Credibility and Early Consultation Count Most	52
The quality of HR leadership	53
What Makes the Best HR Directors Confident About their Status?	54
Measuring output	54
Board membership	54
Early consultation	55
Executive status	55
Conclusion	57
Case Study: British Telecom	57
Case Study: Allied Irish Bank	62
Chapter 4: Developing a Strategic HR Capability	69
Executive Summary	69
Case Report: BAE Systems	70
Current State-of-play: Service Delivery Rather Than Strategy Alignment	71
What the Survey Tells Us: Personal Capability, Not Numbers, Makes the Difference	73
Numbers	73
The HR function's structure	75
The size of the HR function	76
Skills and Personal Capabilities	76
Conclusion	77
Case Study: British Telecom	80
Case Study: Kelly Services	84
Chapter 5: Tracking Progress	91
Executive Summary	91
Introduction: Measurement As a Means of Demonstrating Value	92
Measurement as a means to HR confidence	93
Case Report: Eastern Health Service (Eire)	94
Current State-of-play: Criteria for Measurement	95
Aligning HR and corporate goals	96
Rank Xerox	96
Current State-of-play: The Balanced Scorecard and Other Performance Measurement Frameworks	97

Case Report: Rockwater	97
Case Report: Champion International	100
Current State-of-play: Non-financial Measures	102
Innovation health	103
Benchmarking with qualitative measures	105
Measures and the HR Director's Credibility	106
Conclusion	107
Key Lessons	108
Case Study: Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital	109
Chapter 6: Delivering Services Effectively	119
Executive Summary	119
Introduction: The Origins of Outsourcing and Shared Services Provision in Delivering HR Services	120
The benefits of outsourcing and shared services	120
Current State-of-the-art: Delivery Issues from a Strategic HR Perspective	121
Making the Choice Between Outsourcing and Shared Services	121
The right time to outsource	123
Keeping Control Over the Delivery	123
Managing the Interface Between Service Providers, Internal Clients and Group Operations	124
What the Survey Tells Us: Service Priorities and Delivery Implications	125
The Role of e-HR and Employee Self-service	126
What the experts think	126
Conclusion	128
Case Study: ITNET	129
Chapter 7: The New HR Director	133
Executive Summary	133
Introduction: The Importance of the HR Director in Creating a Dynamic, Enthusiastic HR Function	134
Kelly Services	134
Allied Irish Bank	135
The credibility of the HR director	135
Establishing the right team	135
Current State-of-play: The Qualities of the Effective HR Director	136
What the Survey Tells Us: Line Management Experience and Professional Networking are Critical	137
1. Line Management Experience	137
What the experts think	137
Darren Cox at Kelly Services	137
Mike Lewis at Allied Irish Bank	138
David Bornor at The Children's Mutual	138
Jacqueline Alexander at Novell	139
2. Professional and Personal Networking	141
Encouraging a wider view of the organization	142
3. A General Management Education	143
What the Survey Tells Us: Should HR Directors Rely on Qualifications?	145
Qualifications vs experience	145

Age, gender and the public sector factor	145
Equal opportunities	146
Conclusion: Having the Personal Confidence to Make a Difference	148
Case Study: Phil Porter	149
Is HR a Profession or a Management Discipline? Can it be Both?	153
The responsibilities associated with professional status	153
Chapter 8: Executive Summary – Achieving HR’s Strategic Potential	157
Two Major Constraints to Strategic Partnership	158
Seven Milestones to Achieving HR Enfranchisement	160
1. Strategic control of HR service delivery	158
2. Credibility among business units	159
3. Alignment with key organizational goals	159
4. Developing strategic HR capability	159
5. Targets measured against key organizational goals	160
6. Demonstration of strategic HR effectiveness	160
7. Early consultation in strategy development	160
Conclusion: Is HR a Profession or a Strategic Management Function?	161
References	163
Appendix: The Survey Results	167